Development Studies 2013:

Business and Development Studies Peter Lund-Thomsen, Michael Wendelboe Hansen, Adam Lindgreen, 2019-10-16
Business and Development Studies Issues and Perspectives provides a comprehensive collection of cutting edge theoretical and empirical contributions to the emerging field of business and development studies Compared to more traditional business school accounts of business in developing countries which focus on the challenges and opportunities of doing business in developing countries this anthology explores whether how and under what conditions business contributes to the achievement of economic social and environmental goals in developing countries The book consolidates the current status of academic work on business and development identifies state of the art in relation to this academic field and establishes a future research agenda for business and development studies as an emerging academic discipline within the social sciences The book will be of interest to researchers and students including economists geographers sociologists political scientists corporate social responsibility specialists and development scholars who are seeking an in depth overview of current debates about the role of business as a development agent in the Global South The book is also of relevance to practitioners that are engaged in work with the private sector seeking to enhance the positive effects and minimize the negative economic social and environmental consequences of business activity in the Global South

Handbook of Early Childhood Development Research and Its Impact on Global Policy Pia Rebello Britto Ph.D., Patrice L. Engle Ph.D., Charles M. Super Ph.D., 2012-12-14 Early childhood development research offers solutions to several of the world's social and economic problems solutions that can break the cycle of intergenerational poverty improve the health education and wellbeing of the global population and yield high rates of return on investment in the formative years of life And yet over one third of children worldwide under five years of age still fail to achieve their full developmental potential due to malnutrition poverty disease neglect and lack of learning opportunities Handbook of Early Childhood Development Research and Its Impact on Global Policy calls for placing early childhood development at the top of the global policy agenda enabling children to achieve their full developmental potential and to contribute to equitable economic and social progress worldwide The volume presents evidence based programs and policies for advancing the positive development of young children across the globe focusing on developing countries An international ensemble of scholars policymakers and practitioners present evidence from multiple disciplinary sectorial and analytical perspectives emphasizing the importance of scientific findings in promoting child development and addressing programmatic challenges to quality sustainability measurement finance and capacity Sponsored by the Society for Research in Child Development SRCD the premier international association of developmental scientists and the United Nations Children's Fund UNICEF a leading organization for promoting children's wellbeing worldwide this Handbook will be invaluable to policy advocates program managers of national governments international NGOs and development agencies as well as to scholars and students in the areas of child development and global policy "Code of Massachusetts regulations, 2013" ,2013 Archival snapshot of entire looseleaf Code of Massachusetts Regulations held by the Social Law Library of Massachusetts as of January 2020 Education and Empowerment in India Avinash Kumar Singh,2015-12-22 This book explores the critical linkages between education and empowerment of women marginalized groups and other disadvantaged sections of society It Provides an overview of educational policies and practices from India s independence to the present day and tracks relevant changes and amendments Examines a range of issues connected with education such as the Right to Education Act empowerment and community mobilization higher education challenges and other emerging topics Brings together both theoretical postulates and empirical findings Measuring resilience in a volatile world ,2014-04-30 Substantial numbers of the world s chronically poor and malnourished population live in an increasingly volatile world The dangerous nexus of climate change rapid population growth conflict and food price volatility already appears to have pushed several poor regions into states of permanent crisis even as the rest of the world has seen unprecedented progress against poverty This disturbing state of affairs along with our expanded knowledge of the intimate interactions between short term shocks and long run development has catalyzed widespread interest in resilience building and in what such a framework implies for understanding the causes and consequences of acute vulnerability to natural and man made disasters In this paper we ask what this paradigm implies for the measurement and analysis of resilience Resilience is fundamentally about complex dynamics Slower moving ecological economic demographic and social stressors create vulnerability to short run shocks which in turn can have long term consequences by reinforcing preexisting vulnerabilities In our view this basic conception of resilience has fundamental measurement implications First resilience can be measured and understood only through higher frequency surveys that capture the causes and consequences of time varying stressors and shocks including seasonal shocks Second resilience can be understood only through surveys that capture the multidimensional complexity of stressors shocks and feedback loops including the complex interactions between economic social and ecological forces Third the underlying stressors that create vulnerability and the resilience building interventions that reduce vulnerability can be gauged and evaluated only over the longer term This conceptualization of resilience motivates us to go a step further than existing research on resilience and on food and nutrition security measurement by outlining a far more expansive strategy for improving and scaling up the monitoring measurement and analysis of the world s most vulnerable populations We propose the development of a multicountry system of high frequency long term sentinel sites in the world s most vulnerable regions If implemented along the lines we conceive this system could be a high return investment for resilience building efforts since it would serve multiple purposes This system offers the only rigorous means of monitoring vulnerability and resilience in the world s most volatile regions This system would bolster existing early warning systems by complementing them with household level indicators This system would improve the targeting of emergency resources This system would be instrumental for diagnosing the underlying sources of vulnerability for identifying key thresholds of resilience and for designing appropriate resilience building strategies And this system would provide a rigorous foundation for large scale evaluations of resilience building activities While there are strong justifications for such a system the devil is necessarily in the details and much of this paper is concerned with those details Largely to learn from existing experience we first review existing measurement strategies that are similar in purpose or design to the sentinel system outlined above When implemented long term high frequency measurement systems have often yielded great benefits but been hampered by cost lack of institutional coordination and insufficient dissemination and usage of data The need to keep costs down and benefits widespread therefore motivates us to consider which countries in the world have the highest priority for the development of sentinel sites based on indicators such as child nutrition and health outcomes exposure to disasters and past emergency assistance levels from the international community We then turn to crucial issues of data collection design by outlining a hybrid sampling and survey design that will help achieve the various objectives outlined above while keeping costs down We also argue that the proliferation of mobile phones and other information and communications technologies offers substantial scope for a cost effective system of this kind far more so than would have been available in the past Finally we consider who should lead and contribute to this ambitious effort Since the principal advantage of this approach is that it can yield benefits for a wide range of institutions and purposes relief and development operations and research social and biophysical sciences and since the costs of a long term commitment to these sentinel surveys would be large indeed for any single agency we propose the need for a relatively broad consortium of international donors This consortium should first focus on establishing partnerships with national governments and then commit to long term resilience monitoring as well as domestic capacity building With this essential commitment in place this consortium would then need to secure implementing partners with a permanent presence on the ground as well as the technical expertise of international organizations of various sorts Ultimately we argue it is only this kind of long term cooperative commitment that will provide a scientific evidence base for diagnosing and resolving the world s worst problems of hunger poverty and malnutrition Only this kind of sentinel system can generate the data and evidence needed to inform actions to build resilience and to help the global community eliminate extreme poverty in the generation ahead The status quo is simply not enough

Fixing the Broken Promise of Education for All Angela Hawke, 2015 Fixing the Broken Promise of Education for All published by the UNESCO Institute for Statistics and UNICEF presents the latest statistical evidence from administrative records and household surveys to better identify children who are out of school and the reasons for their exclusion from education. It aims to inform the policies needed to reach these children and finally deliver the promise of Education for All. Based on a series of national and regional studies and policy analysis by leading experts, the report explains why better data and cross sector collaboration are fundamental to the design of effective interventions to overcome the barriers facing out of school children and adolescents. While highlighting the way forward for system wide policies to improve educational quality and affordability, the report also presents the information needed for targeted approaches to address the compounding effects of disadvantage faced by children caught up in armed conflict, girls, working children, children with disabilities or members of ethnic or linguistic minorities. This report presents a roadmap to improve the data, research and policies needed to catalyse action for out of school children as the world embarks on a new development agenda for education.
