
FAMILIES AND HOUSEHOLDS (AQA Alevel Sociology) 2023-2024 Questions and Answers with complete solution

COUPLES (families and households)

What is the "instrumental" role & who plays this? Ans- The instrumental role is geared towards achieving success at work in order to provide for the family. This role is played by the husband

What is the "expressive" role & who plays this? Ans- The expressive role is geared towards primary socialisation of the children and meeting the emotional needs of the family. This role is played by the wife

What does Parsons argue that his view of the division of labour is based on? Ans- Biological differences between men and women (women 'naturally' suited to the nurturing role and men to the provider)

What are the "criticisms" of Parsons' view? Ans- - Young and Willmott (1962) argue that men are now taking greater responsibility for domestic tasks and more women are becoming wage earners
- Feminists reject Parsons' view that the division of labour is natural & they argue that is only benefits men

What is meant by "segregated" conjugal roles? Ans- Where the couple have separate roles: a male breadwinner and a female homemaker - as in Parsons' view. Their leisure activities also tend to be separate

What is meant by "joint" conjugal roles? Ans- Where the couple share tasks such as housework and childcare and spend their leisure time together

What did Young and Willmott find in their study of families in Bethnal Green in the 1950s? Ans- - That men were the breadwinners who played little part in home life and spent their leisure time with workmates in pubs.
- Women were full-time housewives with sole responsibility for housework and childcare, helped by their female relatives.
- The limited leisure time women had was also spent with female kin

What view do Young and Willmott take of the family? Ans- March of Progress - they see the family as gradually improving for all its members, becoming more equal and democratic. They argue that there has been a long-term trend away from segregated conjugal roles and towards joint conjugal roles and the 'symmetrical family'
