Transition Between Cash & Vouchers and In-kind Aid to Improve Efficiency and Effectiveness of

Humanitarian Assistance Swapna Rajaram, 2018 When an emergency happens and the local markets are functioning well humanitarian organizations lean towards cash and vouchers transfer programme In the context of humanitarian assistance the term Cash transfer programme is used to refer to the provision of cash or vouchers given to individuals household or community recipients not to governments or other state actors CaLP The Cash Learning Partnership n d This helps in strengthening the markets image in the affected area and it also stimulates the local economy by ensuring that the money spent on a country stays in the country However it is important for the humanitarian organizations to be swift enough to switch to delivering in kind assistance if the local markets fail In this thesis a generic system dynamics model is developed to evaluate quantitatively the impacts and to measure the efficiency and effectiveness of switching from cash vouchers to in kind aid transfer This model is applied to a case study of World Food Programme s intervention of cash food vouchers and food transfers among Colombian refugees and poor Ecuadorians in Carchi and Sucumb os Multiple scenarios are simulated to evaluate the demand satisfaction rates and the economic prosperity of the affected area The model helps humanitarian decision makers to make the humanitarian supply chain be agile enough to switch to delivering in kind aid when necessary

Cash-transfer Programming in Emergencies Pantaleo Creti, Susanne Jaspars, 2006 In emergencies distributing cash in a targeted manner can often meet people s immediate needs more quickly and appropriately than the direct distribution of commodities such as food aid Cash gives people choices and thereby preserves their dignity Commodity distribution may pose logistical problems takes time and in the case of food aid may disrupt local markets if food is actually available within the affected country or region But among humanitarian agencies there are fears that cash transfers will pose security risks create inflation and fail to be used to meet basic needs In this guide the first of its kind Oxfam staff members present the rationale behind cash transfer programs considering the arguments for and against cash as an alternative to commodity distribution They also give guidance on when cash is the most appropriate intervention and how to assess this Different types of cash intervention are compared cash grants vouchers and cash for work and the guide uses checklists to explain the practical steps involved in implementing them They draw on the experience of Oxfam and other agencies of operating such programs including responses to the devastation caused by the Indian Ocean tsunami in December 2004 The guidelines are primarily intended for NGO personnel humanitarian program managers food security specialists public health engineers finance staff and logisticians Policymakers in donor organizations and international agencies will also find them relevant The sixteen cards contain key elements from the book to explain how to assess whether cash is the most appropriate response to any particular emergency The cards and the paperback are also available as a set The Other Side of the Coin Ugo Gentilini, 2016-09-12 Over 60 million people are currently displaced due to conflict or violence and about 140 million are exposed to natural disasters As part of humanitarian responses to those affected populations growing attention is paid to cash transfers as a form of assistance Cash is being strongly advocated by several actors and for good reasons they have the potential to provide choice empower people and spark economic multipliers But what is their comparative performance relative to in kind transfers Are there objectives for which there are particular evidence gaps And what should be considered when choosing between those forms of assistance This paper is one of the first reviews examining those questions across humanitarian sectors and in relation to multiple forms of assistance including cash vouchers and in kind assistance food and non food These were assessed based on solid impact evaluations and through the lens of food security nutrition livelihoods health education and shelter objectives The paper finds that there is large variance in the availability of comparative evidence across sectors This ranges from areas where evidence is substantial i.e. food security to realms where it is limited i.e. nutrition or where not a single comparative evaluation was available i.e. health education and shelter Where evidence is substantial data shows that the effectiveness of cash and in kind transfers is similar on average In terms of costs cash is generally more efficient to delivery However overall costs would hinge on the scale of interventions crisis context procurement practices and a range of hidden costs In other words the appropriateness of transfers cannot be predetermined and should emerge from response analysis that considers program objectives the level of market functionality predicted cost effectiveness implementation capacity the management of key risks such as on protection and gender political economy beneficiary preferences and resource availability Finally it seems possible and necessary to reconcile humanitarian imperatives with solid research to inform decision making especially on dimensions beyond food security

Comparing Cash and Voucher Transfers in a Humanitarian Context Jenny C. Aker, Despite recent calls in support of cash transfers there is little rigorous evidence of the relative impacts of cash versus in kind transfers especially in humanitarian contexts where a majority of such programs take place This paper uses data from a randomized experiment in the Democratic Republic of Congo to assess the relative impacts and costs of equivalently valued cash and voucher transfers The voucher program distorted households purchases along both the extensive and intensive margin as compared with unconstrained cash households Yet there were no differences in food consumption or other measures of well being in part due to the fact that voucher households were able to resell part of what they purchased As there were no significant benefits to vouchers cash transfers were the more cost effective modality for both the implementing agency and program recipients in this context

Cash and Vouchers in Emergencies Paul Harvey,2005 The paper examines the use of cash and vouchers to provide people with assistance in emergency situations Advocates of the approach argue that it gives people choice and dignity sceptics fear it could incur risks of insecurity and corruption exclusion of women and misuse of cash The Other Side of the Coin Ugo Gentilini,2016 Over 60 million people are currently displaced due to conflict or violence and about 140 million are exposed to natural disasters As part of humanitarian responses to those affected populations growing attention is paid to cash transfers as a form of assistance Cash is being strongly advocated by several actors and for good reasons they have the potential to provide choice empower people and spark economic multipliers But what is their comparative performance relative to in kind transfers Are there objectives for which there are particular evidence gaps And what should be considered when choosing between those forms of assistance This paper is one of the first reviews examining those questions across humanitarian sectors and in relation to multiple forms of assistance including cash vouchers and in kind assistance food and non food These were assessed based on solid impact evaluations and through the lens of food security nutrition livelihoods health education and shelter objectives The paper finds that there is large variance in the availability of comparative evidence across sectors This ranges from areas where evidence is substantial i e food security to realms where it is limited i e nutrition or where not a single comparative evaluation was available i e health education and shelter Where evidence is substantial data shows that the effectiveness of cash and in kind transfers is similar on average In terms of costs cash is generally more efficient to delivery However overall costs would hinge on the scale of interventions crisis context procurement practices and a range of hidden costs In other words the appropriateness of transfers cannot be predetermined and should emerge from response analysis that considers program objectives the level of market functionality predicted cost effectiveness implementation capacity the management of key risks such as on protection and gender political economy beneficiary preferences and resource availability Finally it seems possible and necessary to reconcile humanitarian imperatives with solid research to inform decision making especially on dimensions beyond food security Page 4 of cover

Conventional and Emerging Digital Cash and Voucher Assistance Technologies: Do Blockchain - Enabled Solutions Add Value? Asanga Lokusooriya,Oxfam,Imogen Westfield,Emily Wong,Danielle Leotta,Pramod Mishra,2023-04-11 Since the early 2000s the aid sector has experienced an increase in the uptake of cash and voucher assistance CVA for development and humanitarian interventions Propelled by the 21016 World Humanitarian Summit and the subsequent Inter Agency Standing Committee s Grand Bargain Commitments multilateral and bilateral donors have increased International Humanitarian Aid

IHA spending on CVA programs including the use of new electronic CVA e CVA delivery mechanisms E CVA refers to any method of delivering cash and voucher assistance which utilises electronic transfers or payments of digitally stored cash in place of physical currency or paper vouchers To understand whether the increase in CVA spend is generating positive impacts for beneficiaries the Grand Bargain Commitments 3 calls for donors and humanitarian agencies to contribute to a global evidence base to assess the costs benefits impacts and risks of cash relative to in kind assistance service delivery interventions and vouchers This report seeks to contribute to the existing evidence base to inform Oxfam and global cash actors on the lessons learned from different e CVA approaches across a range of contexts The report outlines the strengths and limitations of several key e CVA delivery mechanisms and solutions used globally in development and humanitarian settings including mobile money e vouchers banking and blockchain solutions To understand how these modalities work in practice we seek to assess the effectiveness efficiency relevance coherence sustainability and impact of the delivery mechanisms used in four case studies implemented by Oxfam and implementing partners in Vanuatu Bangladesh Zimbabwe and Philippines As each case study example is context specific it is challenging to compare each project s e CVA mechanism s strengths and limitations Instead this report demonstrates that project teams need to holistically consider the potential unintended impacts efficiency effectiveness sustainability relevance and coherence of e CVA mechanisms prior to designing and implementing interventions using new technologies Summary considerations for Oxfam project teams to consider ahead of commencing e CVA programs are presented below and at the conclusion of this report
