What This Significantly Means and For What Reason
 A significant correlation found in a study of 1990s-era U.S. adolescents revealed that the more time adolescents spent watching television, the more they were exposed to the three negative influences. It is important to note that this correlation was not causal, meaning that it does not mean that watching television causes adolescents to be exposed to these influences. However, the correlation does suggest that there is a relationship between the two variables, and that the relationship is not random. This finding is significant because it suggests that the more time adolescents spend watching television, the more they are exposed to the three negative influences. This is a concern because these influences can have a negative impact on adolescents' mental health and self-esteem. Therefore, it is important for parents and educators to be aware of the potential risks of excessive television viewing and to take steps to minimize exposure to these influences.
