

The Province of Canada: 1854–1867

The union of the two Canadas, which had taken place in 1841 (the Act of Union, see page 164), was not successful. Not one political party could seem to get the support of a majority of the Legislative Assembly and implement any changes.

The Canadiens (French) believed that the English Canadians were trying to make them lose their cultural identity (their language, religion, and culture). The English Canadians accused the Canadiens of trying to run everything their way. Refer to the chart below when reading this page.

“Rep by Pop”

One of the disagreements between French- and English-speaking members of the Legislative Assembly was representation by population or “rep by pop.” In rep by pop the number of elected members of the Legislative Assembly is based on the number of voters.

The reformers in Canada West, led by George Brown and his Clear Grit party, were pushing for rep by pop. This would mean that, since its population was larger, Canada West would have more representatives in the Legislative Assembly than Canada East would have. The representatives from Canada East, led by George-Étienne Cartier, were against rep by pop, since it would result in less power for them in the Legislative Assembly. It seemed unfair since, in the past when Canada East had a larger population than Canada West, the two had equal representation in the Legislative Assembly.

Political Deadlock

There was disagreement in the Legislative Assembly at this time. Since there was an equal number of representatives from Canada West and Canada East, the two groups often voted against one another and major legislation could not be passed. A deadlock resulted.

Fortunately, George Brown, the leader of the Clear Grits, and John A. Macdonald, the leader of the Tories, were able to save the situation.* Even though the two men had been bitter enemies for years, they put aside their personal feelings and acted for the good of the country. George Brown stood up in the Legislative Assembly and said that he would work with Macdonald and George-Étienne Cartier, the leader of the Bleus. Together they could form a federal union of the Province of Canada (Canada West and Canada East), the Atlantic colonies, and the North-West Territories. The offer was accepted and the groups united to work for a federal union. A government where the political parties work together is called a coalition.

Political Party Chart

Canada West		Canada East
POLITICAL PARTY AND LEADER	BELIEFS	POLITICAL PARTY AND LEADER	BELIEFS
Clear Grit Party George Brown	Reformers (wanted to change and improve things)	Le Parti Rouge A.A. Dorion	Reformers (favoured rights of Canadiens)
Liberal-Conservative Party (Tories) John A. Macdonald	believed in British system of government (against change in government)	Le Parti Bleus (Bleu) George-Étienne Cartier	favoured co-operation between Canadiens and English-speaking Canadians

Rep by pop—The number of elected members of a Legislative Assembly (the representatives) is based on the number of voters (based on the population). “Rep by pop” is an abbreviation for representation by population.

*The Tories are today called the Conservatives.
Federal union—a political union in which the members have certain powers over their own affairs, and certain powers are turned over to a central government
