Congress. House. Committee on International Relations,2005      Inside China's One-child Policy Bicao Li,Dartmouth College. Master of Arts in Liberal Studies Program,2013 Family planning policy or the commonly called one child policy introduced in 1978 and officially applied in 1979 is the one child limitation imposed on the population of the People s Republic of China It officially restricts married urban couples to having only one child while allowing exemptions in several cases including rural couples ethnic minorities and parents who have no siblings The one child policy was created by the Chinese government to alleviate social economic and environmental problems but the policy itself and the manner in which the policy has been implemented can be against humanity and it is controversial because it has been implicated in negative social consequences China like many other Asian countries has a long tradition of son preference because only sons carry the family name and are responsible for continuing the bloodline This tradition coupled with the one child policy has resulted in an increase in forced abortions female infanticide underreporting of female births and the imbalance of the sex ration more men than women This thesis contains narrative and oral history of 12 interviewees including single children people with siblings parents who have tried in many ways to have more than one child mothers who were forced to have abortions and government officials This thesis would not only document the one child policy but also uncover the role it has played in the lives of Chinese citizens     Asian-Pacific & Worldwide Documents on Population Topics ,1987     Documentation on Women, Children, and Human Rights ,2003     Slaughter of the Innocents

John Shields Aird,1990 The author traces the one child per family population control policy in China using Chinese documents many translated here for the first time as primary documents     Working Papers ,1991     The Journal of Asian Studies ,1990     Working Paper ,1991     *Guan V.
