

Cell Cycle and Mitosis

Background: The cell cycle is a series of events that take place during the life of a cell. The cell cycle is made up of two main stages: Interphase and Mitosis. Most of the cell cycle is spent in Interphase, which consists of G_1 , S, and G_2 . Mitosis consists of nuclear and cytoplasmic division, which is carried out during Prophase, Metaphase, Anaphase, and Telophase/Cytokinesis and is done so that multicellular organisms can grow (add more cells) and replace/repair tissue.

Interphase: During G_1 , the cell is carrying out its normal metabolic activities. During S, the cell duplicates its genetic material. The genetic material duplicates so that when the cell divides, each daughter cell contains the same amount of genetic material as the parent cell. During G_2 , the cell prepares for division.

Mitosis: During Prophase the nuclear membrane breaks down and the genetic material condenses into chromosomes, which are visible under the microscope. Centrioles migrate to opposite poles of the cell and microtubules attach to the centrioles. During Metaphase, the duplicated chromosomes line up on the equator of the cell. The microtubules attach to the centromere, which holds the duplicated chromosomes together. During Anaphase, the duplicated chromosomes separate, one of each pair being pulled toward opposite poles of the cell. During Telophase, new nuclear membranes form around the separated genetic material, which begins to unwind, and during Cytokinesis, the cytoplasm divides. The result is two daughter cells that look exactly like and have the exact genetic material as, the parent cell.

In this lab, you will examine plant cells in different stages of the cell cycle. You will identify the stages and draw them as you see them under high power.

Materials:

Prepared slide of onion root tip

Procedures:

1. Locate and focus on the root tip using the lowest power of your microscope. Then change to high power.
2. Use the photomicrographs below as a guide to locate and identify Interphase and each stage of mitosis.
