HUMAN IMPACT

Deforestation Video 3

CHECK YOUR UNDERSTANDING How does deforestation affect a river in the flood-prone region?

Removing trees leads to compact soil and less water uptake by the atmosphere.

There is nothing to help break the flood-prone region.
Forest cover is reduced, and the water is lost.

Water is the dominant green forest gas, but its effect on the atmosphere is small. Forests are not just green lungs; they are water pumps. The trees in the forest are water pumps that pump water up into the air.

As a result, they make up a lot of water.

The ground water has two main sources: rain and snow. The ground water is a mixture of rain and snow. The ground water is a mixture of rain and snow. The ground water is a mixture of rain and snow.

If we remove trees and plants from the soil and water, it is lost.

The heavy rain pumps the soil, which is the source of water. The water is lost to the atmosphere. The water is lost to the atmosphere.

How does deforestation lead to drought?
The loss of water in the ground is a big problem. The loss of water in the ground is a big problem.
