

2. Required ACM Capabilities

This Chapter specifies required capabilities that an ACM will be tested for and specifies how the reference computer simulation program will be used for required modeling capabilities. All of the required capabilities are described in terms of the capabilities and algorithms of the Commission's reference program. An ACM shall account for the energy performance effects of all of the features described in this chapter.

The modeling procedures and assumptions described in this chapter apply to both the standard design and proposed design. The requirements for the standard design include those that ACMEs shall apply to new features, altered existing features, unchanged existing features or all of the above. In order for an ACM to become approved, it shall, at a minimum, accept all of the required inputs and meet the test criteria when compared against the reference computer program using procedures and assumptions as required in the sections describing the capabilities.

2.1 Compliance

2.1.1 Type of Project Submittal

ACMEs shall require the user to identify the type of project for which compliance is being demonstrated. The ACMEs shall require the user to choose one of the following options:

- New Building
- Addition Alone (modeled as new building but labeled on output) (when ACM is approved for this optional capability)
- Addition Plus Alteration of Existing Building (when ACM is approved for this optional capability)
- Alteration of Existing Building (when ACM is approved for this optional capability)

These compliance options are required even though compliance for existing buildings is an optional capability. Optional capabilities are described in the following chapter of this manual. An ACM shall not produce compliance reports or operate in a compliance mode when users specify features that require optional modeling capabilities for which the ACM is not approved.

2.1.2 New Building or Addition Alone

ACMEs are required to be able to perform compliance on new buildings and additions as if they were new (or newly conditioned), stand-alone, buildings. ACMEs may do this by treating an addition alone as a new building, but an addition modeled in this way shall be reported on all output forms as a Stand Alone Addition.

2.1.3 Scope of Compliance Calculations

For each building or separately permitted space, ACMs shall also require the user to identify the scope of the compliance submittal from the following list:

- Envelope only
- Mechanical only
- Envelope and Lighting
- Envelope and Mechanical
- Lighting and Mechanical
