Chen's team has also developed a model to help researchers predict which proteins are most likely to be involved in disease. The model is based on the idea that proteins that are involved in the same biological process tend to have similar functions. By analyzing the functions of a large number of proteins, the team was able to identify a set of proteins that are likely to be involved in a specific disease.
