

8. To ready rifle—As the command is given, the soldier takes the rifle to the shoulder and keeps the right hand on the slide. The rifle when loaded is always held in the ready position.

9. To load—While at the advance rifle, the soldier keeps the rifle to the left and places it on the right thigh and catches the butt in the left and places it on the right of about 45 degrees. Support the rifle to the left by the thumb and forefinger of the left hand, the other hand closed on the trigger and, taking care not to change the holding of the rifle, load the piece and assume the position of advance rifle.

FIG. 1.—In advance rifle

10. To unload—While at advance rifle, the piece is held as in loading, except that the left hand grips the piece so that the forefinger is placed over the chamber to prevent cartridges from being ejected when the bolt is drawn back. Cartridges are removed from the chamber and replaced in the belt with the right hand. After the piece is unloaded it is brought to the position of advance rifle.

11. To aim—In aiming, first turn the horse so that the target is to the left, drop the rifle into the left hand at the hip, raise it with both hands, and take aim. Care should be taken not to change the horse by a change in the holding of the rifle.

12. To fire—The only classes of fire practicable to employ mounted with the rifle are fire at will and fire en masse, and these are infinitely applicable only to small groups of companies, platoons, or individual men.
