A Critical Review of Sustainability Measurement Christoph Burmeister,2025-09-08 Bachelor Thesis from the year 2023 in the subject Business economics Investment and Finance grade 1 0 University of Cologne Wirtschafts und Sozialwissenschaftliche Fakult t language English abstract This Bachelor s thesis critically examines ESG Environmental Social Governance scores as tools for measuring corporate sustainability As sustainable investing gains momentum institutional and retail investors increasingly rely on ESG ratings from third party providers However these scores often diverge significantly across agencies raising concerns about transparency comparability and their usefulness in capital allocation The thesis analyzes and compares the methodologies of five major ESG rating agencies MSCI Refinitiv Sustainalytics RobecoSAM and ISS oekom The question is how this can occur since the same company cannot have different ESG performances To what extent are ESG scores of different agencies comparable Is there a certain ESG score investors can rely on Do ESG scores materially impact risk and return factors which are mainly considered by investors How do they affect companies ESG performance and daily business The objectives of this thesis are derived from these questions Above all it should be clarified why ESG scores show such a divergence It is also important whether the ESG scores impact capital markets or the companies themselves because an impact would increase the overall significance of ESG scores To answer these objectives ESG as a sustainability concept and its associated investment approach will be explained in more detail to provide a baseline Afterwards the origin of ESG scores is described
