Chapter 11: How Genes Are Controlled

Guided Reading Activities

Big idea: Control of gene expression

Answer the following questions as you read modules 11.1–11.11:

1. True or false: The expression of genes can be turned on or off. If false, make it a correct statement.
True

2. Match the following terms to their description: operator, operon, promoter, repressor, and activator.

A protein that binds to DNA and stimulates transcription: activator

Genes that serve a related function and the sequences that control them: operon

Place where RNA polymerase begins transcription: promoter

Protein that blocks the RNA polymerase from binding the DNA: repressor

DNA sequence that determines whether RNA polymerase binds the promoter: operator

3. A mutation in the bacterial gene that codes for the lac repressor creates a repressor that binds irreversibly to the lac operator. Briefly explain what effect, if any, this would have on the bacterium's metabolism of lactose.

The repressor would not detach from the operator, so the bacterium would be unable to metabolize lactose.

4. The process by which a cell becomes specialized in structure and function is called differentiation.

5. Briefly explain how the inactivation of the X chromosome in human females is an example of epigenetics.

One of the female X chromosomes is randomly inactivated by methylation. Future generations of cells born from this cell will have the same X chromosome inactivated. This process is an example of epigenetics.
