Civil War

The Civil War was an armed conflict in the United States of America, taking place between 1861 and 1865. The term "Civil War" refers to an organized war between groups within the same country. The difference between a civil war and a revolution is that, in a civil war, both sides continue to be the legitimate government of a country, whereas a revolution involves one group trying to change the system of government entirely. The Civil War was fought over the issue of slavery, as well as for the states' right to secede, or leave the Union independently.

Leading up to the war, the United States was composed of 36 states, each with its own constitution. As shown in the table, each state had its own constitution, and all states had a right to secede. This right, against the federal government, was known as the "secessionist" right. Between 1861 and 1865, the United States was divided into two main groups, the Union and the Confederacy. The Union was the group of states that remained loyal to the federal government, while the Confederacy was the group of states that seceded from the Union.

The states of Mississippi, Florida, Alabama, Georgia, Louisiana, and South Carolina seceded from the Union in 1861. These states formed together to form the Confederate States of America. The other states that remained loyal to the Union were the Union States. The Union States were the group of states that remained loyal to the federal government, while the Confederate States were the group of states that seceded from the Union.

The war began in 1861, when the Confederate States of America declared its independence from the Union. The Union States then declared war on the Confederate States. The war lasted for four years, from 1861 to 1865. The Union States won the war, and the Confederate States were dissolved. The war ended with the Emancipation Proclamation, which freed the slaves in the Confederate States.

The war was a turning point in American history. It ended slavery and established the Union as a single, unified nation. The war also led to the passage of the 13th and 14th Amendments to the Constitution, which guaranteed the rights of all citizens, regardless of race.

Civil War

Confederacy, which meant all those states that had seceded from the Union, were joined the Confederacy. Most citizens were from Virginia and remained in the Union.

Both sides had recruitment campaigns and were successful in 1861, when the Confederacy had more soldiers than the Union.

The Union had a larger army and more resources, but the Confederacy had a larger navy. The Union's navy was larger, but the Confederacy had a larger navy.

The war was a turning point in American history. It ended slavery and established the Union as a single, unified nation. The war also led to the passage of the 13th and 14th Amendments to the Constitution, which guaranteed the rights of all citizens, regardless of race.
