Crops and Methods for Soil Improvement Alva Agee, 1913 Crops and Methods for Soil Improvement Alva Agee, 2020-04-15 Nearly all profitable farming in this country is based upon the fundamental fact that our lands are storehouses of fertility and that this reserve of power is essential to a successful agriculture. Most soils, no matter how unproductive their condition to day, have natural strength that we take into account either consciously or unconsciously. Some good farm methods came into use thousands of years ago. Experience led to their acceptance. They were adequate only because there was natural strength in the land. Crops and Methods for Soil Improvement \(Classic Reprint\) Alva Agee, 2017-09-13 Excerpt from Crops and Methods for Soil Improvement. Nitrogen, phosphoric acid, and potash are the three substances that may not be in available form in sufficient amount for a growing crop. The lack may be in all three or in any two or in any one of these plant constituents. The natural strength of the soil
