CROSSING GUARD

A crossing guard is a community helper who keeps people safe while they cross the street. You might see them near schools in the morning and afternoon. They wear bright, reflective clothing so drivers can see them easily, even from far away. Many carry a big stop sign to signal when cars should stop.

Crossing guards watch traffic carefully. When it's safe, they step into the crosswalk and raise their stop sign. This tells drivers to wait while children and adults walk across. They make sure everyone gets to the other side before letting cars move again.

Their job is very important because roads can be dangerous. Cars, buses, and bicycles are always moving, and it can be hard for people—especially children—to know when it's safe to cross. Crossing guards help prevent accidents and teach people to be careful near traffic.

Crossing guards also set a good example for safety. They remind kids to look both ways before crossing and to walk instead of run. By following the instructions, everyone can get where they're going safely.
