

CSE Documentation Style

CSE style is a method of documentation used primarily in scientific writing and recommended by the Council of Science Editors (CSE). This style is comprised of three major systems of citation: citation-sequence, citation-name, and name-year. In each of the systems, in-text references acknowledge the sources of information used in writing your paper and correspond to a list of end references (variously called references, cited references, literature cited, reference list, or bibliography), which provide details about the sources.

FORMATTING GUIDELINES

- In-text references in CSE style either use numbers in superscript within the text to refer to the end references (illustrated in both citation-sequence and citation-name systems) or parenthetical citation of the surname of the author or authors and the year of publication (as illustrated in the name-year system).
- The major components within an end reference include the following (see below for more information):

Books and other monographs: Author(s); Title; Content designator; Medium designator; Edition; Secondary author(s); Place of publication; Publisher; Date; Extent (pagination); Physical description.

Journal and newspaper articles: Author(s); Article title; Content designator; Journal or newspaper title; Edition; Medium designator; Date; Volume; Issue; Location (pagination); Physical description.

- In all of the three systems, an end reference begins with author information. List the names of the authors in the order in which they appear in the original text. Begin with the surname of the first author, followed by the initial letters of the given first and middle names. Separate the surname and the initials of an author by a space; separate successive authors from each other by a comma and a space. Note that an organization such as a university, society, association, corporation, or government body may also serve as an author.
- In general, list a title as it appears in the original document. For monographs and articles in journals and newspapers, capitalize only the first word of a title, proper nouns, proper adjectives, and acronyms.
- Content and medium designators are used to provide information on the nature and physical format of a document. Content designators indicate forms such as databases and computer programs. Medium designators inform the reader that the item is in a nonprint format and requires special equipment.
