

Chapter 14 - Economic Duress, Undue Influence and Unconscionability

Duress

- If the amount of pressure exerted to persuade or induce one party by the other to enter into the contract is illegitimate, the pressured party is given the option to avoid the contract.
- 'illegitimate' – seen as unacceptable in the eyes of the law.
- The pressure MUST have caused the pressured party to enter into the contract.

Basis for intervention

- Reasons for the law intervention:
 1. There was economic duress only if the pressure exerted was so great as to deprive the party pressured of any ability to exercise free will – Criticized as the victim would have been fully aware he was consenting to the new contract. ("overborne will theory")

Occidental Worldwide Investment Corp v Skibs A/S Aranti, Skibs A/S Glarona, Skibs A/S Navalis (The Siboen and the Sibotre) (1976). 14.6.

2. Any apparent consent for contracts induced by duress had been obtained by the exertion of illegitimate pressure by the other party. ("illegitimate pressure" theory)

Pao On v Lau Yiu Long (1980). 14.7. – Lord Scarman: duress is "a coercion of the will such that there is no true consent".

- The pressure was such that it affected the voluntariness of the victim's consent that the law cannot hold him to the resultant contract.
- There is no true consent.

General principles

Universe Tankships Inc. of Monrovia v International Transport Workers Federation, The Universe Sentinel (1983). 4.8. – Lord Scarman:

Requirements to show duress

- (1) pressure amounting to compulsion of the will of the victim;
- (2) the illegitimacy of the pressure exerted;
- (3) the illegitimate pressure must have coerced the victim into entering/modifying the contract.

Effect of duress

- Finding of economic duress deems contract voidable, NOT void.
- Victim cannot rescind contract if found to have affirmed it.

North Ocean Shipping Co Ltd v Hyundai Construction Co Ltd (The Atlantic Baron) (1979). Economic duress, victim had option to avoid the agreement; victim made increased payments without protest, took no actions for 8 months after the protest. – Court held that the action and inaction of the victim amounted to an affirmation of the variation of the terms of the original contract.
