Chapter 13

BUILDING A HOMEBREW HF RECEIVER

The Vanishing Art

The 1986 ARRL Amateur Radio Handbook reported that hardly anyone was building homebrew ham receivers. Since then, handbooks have had fewer and fewer practical details on building radios. Out of hundreds of contacts, so far I've only worked three guys, George, K7DU, Mike, N0MF, and Biz, WD0HCO, who were using homebrew receivers for the QSO. Two of these receivers were made from vacuum tubes. The third homebrew receiver that I worked was an old-fashioned super-regenerative design. However, the super-regenerative was implemented with modern FET transistors and integrated circuits. All three of these receivers seemed to have no trouble hearing me on 40 meter CW. I talked to one other fellow, Gil, N1FED who told me he had just finished a vacuum tube receiver. Unfortunately, it was performing so poorly he was still using his modern transceiver on the air. Gil told me he didn't like transistors. I guess he found printed circuit boards and those pesky oscillations too much trouble.

In spite of this pessimism, you CAN build transistorized receivers that work reasonably well. I built mine because I was intrigued by mysterious circuits like "balanced mixers," "product detectors," "cascode amplifiers," and "crystal ladder filters." Before this project, I could recite the purposes of these circuits, but I had no "feel" for how they worked and why receivers are designed the way they are. What better way to learn than to build one?

What's a reasonable goal?

An "adequate performance" communications receiver
