Local Winds

- ◆ The local winds are caused either by topographic effects or by variations in surface composition—land and water—in the immediate area.
- ◆ Land and Sea Breezes
 - In coastal areas during the warm summer months, the land surface is heated more intensely during the daylight hours than an adjacent body of water is heated. As a result, the air above the land surface heats, expands, and rises, creating an area of lower pressure. At night the reverse takes place.
