Abstract: This paper presents a novel method for the analysis of the dynamic behavior of a system. The method is based on the use of a new type of model, called a "dynamic model", which is able to represent the system's behavior in a more accurate way than the traditional models. The method is applied to the analysis of a system, and the results are compared with the results obtained by the traditional methods. The results show that the proposed method is more accurate and efficient than the traditional methods.
