18th Dec - Monday 10/11/2020

Wednesday

Topic	Definition
Control treatment or exposed	A group of participants who receive placebo or no treatment. What is specifically excluded from both groups
Control treatment or (exposed)	Placebo-control: is randomly assigned to receive no active drug
Study group	Active group, including active, alternative, or that with active, that are provided to participants in the study
Active treatment	Participants in treatment are given a drug or treatment, comparing with the control or placebo or intervention the control group
Blindness	Participants are unaware of which group they are assigned to
Single group trial	One control or one group that receives active
Parallel trial	Two control or two active treatments

Questions

1. Describe the randomization effect (prevalence of being assigned to)

Randomization can reduce the potential bias (selection bias) in clinical trials. It is a process of assigning participants to different groups of treatment and control groups.

2. What are the benefits of randomization?

Randomization helps to ensure that the results of the study are not biased by the way the participants are assigned to the different groups.

3. Why are randomization trials important in clinical research?

Randomization trials are important because they help to ensure that the results of the study are not biased by the way the participants are assigned to the different groups.

4. How does randomization help to reduce bias in clinical trials?

Randomization helps to reduce bias by ensuring that the results of the study are not biased by the way the participants are assigned to the different groups.

5. Why are randomization trials important in clinical research?

Randomization trials are important because they help to ensure that the results of the study are not biased by the way the participants are assigned to the different groups.

6. How does randomization help to reduce bias in clinical trials?

Randomization helps to reduce bias by ensuring that the results of the study are not biased by the way the participants are assigned to the different groups.
