

Chapter Outline

Chapter 9 Photosynthesis and Cellular Respiration

Section 1: Energy in Living Systems*KEY IDEAS

- > What type of energy is used in cells, and what is the ultimate source of this energy?
- > How is an organism's metabolism related to the carbon cycle?
- > How is energy released in a cell?

CHEMICAL ENERGY

- > What type of energy is used in cells, and what is the ultimate source of this energy?
- > Organisms use and store energy in the chemical bonds of organic compounds. Almost all of the energy in organic compounds comes from the sun.
  - Organisms require a constant source of energy. Energy is needed for organisms to maintain their homeostasis.
  - Homeostasis is the process of maintaining internal order and balance even when the environment changes.
  - Photosynthesis is the process by which plants, algae, and some bacteria use sunlight, carbon dioxide, and water to produce carbohydrates and oxygen.
  - Organisms that are able to perform photosynthesis, such as plants, are autotrophs.
  - Autotrophs make organic compounds that serve as food for them and for almost all of the other organisms on Earth.
  - Organisms that cannot make their own food must absorb food molecules made by autotrophs, eat autotrophs, or eat organisms that consume autotrophs.
  - Food molecules that are made or consumed by an organism are the fuel for its cells.
  - Cells use these molecules to release the energy stored in the molecules' bonds. The energy is used to carry out life processes.

METABOLISM AND THE CARBON CYCLE

- > How is an organism's metabolism related to the carbon cycle?
- > Metabolism involves either using energy to build organic molecules or breaking down organic molecules in which energy is stored. Organic molecules contain carbon. Therefore, an organism's metabolism is part of Earth's carbon cycle.
  - Energy enters an ecosystem when organisms use sunlight during photosynthesis to convert carbon dioxide molecules into glucose.
