
Chapter 34 - Data Mining

Data mining - answer The process of extracting valid, previously unknown, comprehensible, and actionable information from large databases and using it to make crucial business decisions.

Uses:

operations associated with data mining techniques - answer- predictive modeling

- database segmentation
- link analysis
- deviation detection

Predictive modeling - answer Similar to the human learning experience in using observations to form a model of the important characteristics of some phenomenon

Model is developed using a supervised learning approach, which has two phases: training (using historical data for a training set) and testing (new data)

two techniques associated with predictive modeling - answer classification and value prediction neural network - answer - contains collections of connected nodes with input, output, and processing at each node

- each processing unit connected by a weighted value
- may contain hidden processing layers

Classification - answer Classification is used to establish a specific predetermined class for each record in a database from a finite set of possible class values.

There are two specializations of classification: tree induction and neural induction.

Example of tree induction:

Value prediction - answer Value prediction is used to estimate a continuous numeric value that is associated with a database record.
