Disproportionate allocation has resulted from over-reliance on a traditional, narrow, and unidimensional measurement framework. If the measurement tool is then administered to individuals from an "unaffected" community, not every individual will be "unaffected" by the targeted environmental hazard. If the measurement tool is "unaffected" provided to individuals from the "affected" community, not every individual will be "affected" by the targeted environmental hazard. In addition, the measurement tool may be "unaffected" by the targeted environmental hazard, but the individuals may be "affected" by the hazard.
