

Hair was sectioned in a horseshoe shape from temple to temple to below the crown.

Following the natural curve of the head, the first section was taken from below the crown. It was pulled at a 90° angle to the head and point cut.

Using this as a guideline, each section was followed parallel to the shape of the head, working from crown to nape.

Following the guideline the technique was repeated on the opposite side.

A small section was taken on the crown. This was used as a guide through the top area and worked across the head by point cutting.

Go over the nape with scissors over combed.

The outline was cut freehand around the ear to create a softer perimeter.

Hair was layered through to the fringe and elevated to maintain length at the front.

A diagonal section was taken at the front from the left temple to the opposite corner of the eyebrow. A short section at the front was point cut to serve as a support for the longer pieces.

Sections were twisted at random to give textures where necessary.

Dry the hair up, then apply the blue toner on the tip only
