Bodies of Water

Planet Earth is made up mostly of water, and within water live the plants. The 50% of Earth's surface is covered with water.

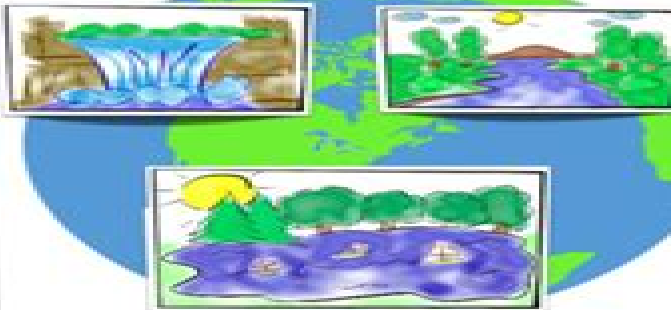

Most of the Earth's water (97%) is salty water. Humans cannot drink salt water. We can only drink fresh water. Fresh water is found in rivers, lakes, streams, glaciers, and in underground aquifers.

Do you know what a body of water is? Bodies of water are areas of water, either inside or salty, that are different from the surface of the earth. Rivers, lakes, ponds, streams, and oceans are all bodies of water. They are all made of water, and they are all different. Some are larger than others, and some are smaller. Some are fresh water, and some are salt water. Some are on land, and some are in the ocean.

Can you think of a large body of water that is not fresh water?

Where does your drinking water come from?

Which Way do Rivers Flow?

Is it all possible to predict which way a river flows? The answer is yes. This is true. All rivers follow the direction of gravity. This means that water will flow from high to low. Some of the world's longest rivers flow from north to south, from east to west, and from south to north. Some of the world's longest rivers flow from north to south, from east to west, and from south to north.

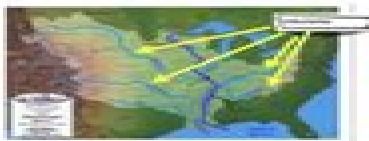

List at least 10 rivers and note their general direction.

Rivers

Rivers are natural streams of fresh water flowing from the high ground. Rivers usually empty into oceans and lakes. Rivers start high in the mountains and flow along the way down the mountainsides.

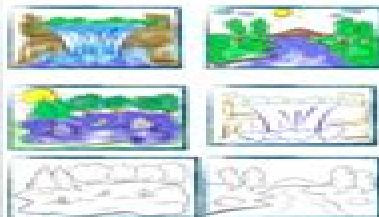

Mountains are rivers or streams flowing into a larger river or lake.

Where do Rivers Come From?

Rivers start high in the mountains or hills. In cold areas, a river may start due to melting snow or glaciers. In some regions, a river starts as a result of water drainage from a number of upland mountain slopes. As different water drains from each slope, they together make creeks (small streams) that have a path to flow and become a river. The streams and creeks that form a river are called the tributaries. Other rivers start in areas where natural springs release water from the underground.

Lakes and Rivers

The Importance of Water Source

From the very early civilizations people have learned the value of water. Most major cities are located near water. Rivers, lakes, and oceans are all sources of water.

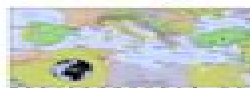

Before the automobile and airplane, people depended on water transportation for trade and communication. But now bodies of water and rivers and oceans have been used for growth and trade by ships.

97% of fresh water is the world's oceans. Most of the world's water is found in the oceans. The world's oceans are made up of salt water. They are the largest bodies of water on Earth. They are the source of most of the world's water. They are the source of most of the world's water. They are the source of most of the world's water.

Oceans

Oceans are the largest bodies of water on Earth. There is more water in the oceans than in all the rivers, lakes, and streams on Earth. The oceans are the source of most of the world's water. They are the source of most of the world's water. They are the source of most of the world's water.

List at least 10 oceans and their locations on the map above.

Lakes

Lakes and bodies of water that are surrounded by land are called lakes. Some lakes are natural, and some are man-made. Some lakes are fresh water, and some are salt water. Some lakes are large, and some are small. Some lakes are deep, and some are shallow. Some lakes are cold, and some are warm. Some lakes are dry, and some are full. Some lakes are frozen, and some are not. Some lakes are polluted, and some are clean. Some lakes are beautiful, and some are ugly. Some lakes are important, and some are not. Some lakes are loved, and some are hated. Some lakes are missed, and some are not. Some lakes are remembered, and some are forgotten. Some lakes are missed, and some are not. Some lakes are remembered, and some are forgotten. Some lakes are missed, and some are not. Some lakes are remembered, and some are forgotten.
