

The bronchi then continue to split into smaller and smaller tubes as much the same way a tree's branches emerge from the trunk and the air we breathe in continues to fill each of these tubes. These smaller tubes are called bronchioles.

At the end of each bronchiole are springs air filled sacs called alveoli and each adult lung contains around 400 million of these. The alveoli are surrounded by extremely small capillaries which transport blood in and out of the lungs with each breath. It is here that the air that we breathe in enters the bloodstream.
