

BOUNCE FLASH

1. For softer lighting effects, you can bounce the flash light off a ceiling, by tilting the flash head. The angle of bounce (from 0° to 90° with click stops at every 15°) are shown in the scale (8).
2. Use auto or manual exposure modes. Remember that the light will have to travel further depending on the angle of bounce and the height of the ceiling.
  - a) On auto, use the Auto Check facility to check exposure.
  - b) On manual, the distance used to get the aperture setting will be the total distance the light has to travel.
3. Beware of coloured ceilings. Any colour in the reflecting surface will show up in a colour picture.
4. You can also bounce the flash light off walls by holding it on its side. Be sure to check that the auto sensor is pointing towards the subject if you are using auto flash.

MANUAL FLASH OPERATION

1. Set the appropriate film speed (ISO/ASA 25-1000) with the sliding selector (10). The speed is shown on the scale (9).
2. Select the 'M' position on switch (3).
3. Switch the flash on at switch (16), the ready light (14) will glow when the flash is ready to be fired. You will also get a flash ready signal in the viewfinder if using the dedicated flash facility.
4. Find the flash to subject distance on the distance scale (12). Look at the aperture setting on the aperture scale (11) directly above the subject distance.

NOTE ON MANUAL OPERATION

1. Use manual if the subject is beyond the Auto flash range. With ISO/ASA 100 film, for instance, you will get a maximum range of 10m at f/2.
2. Use manual if you think the background will fool the Auto exposure system into giving an incorrect exposure. The light output will be unaffected by any reflectance of the subject or surroundings and will be correct for the given flash to subject distance.

TELE ADAPTER (17)

When using an 85 mm lens on your camera, clip this adapter over the flash tube cover. This will produce an angle of light to match your lens.
