The United Nations was formed in 1945, by the Allies of World War II. The five permanent members of the United Nations are France, Great Britain, USA, the USSR, and China. The USA and USSR did not remain allies after the war because of the following ideological differences.

- a) Economic (USA: Free Market vs. USSR: Communism)
- b) Political (USA: Democracy vs. USSR: Dictatorship)

Each country decided to build up its military power, in case the differences should ever come to war. Proliferation of nuclear weapons and other weapons of mass destruction created a conflict known as the Cold War. The leader of the USA was Harry Truman at the outset of the Cold War, while Joseph Stalin was the leader of the USSR.

At the end of World War II, the Soviet army occupied most of Eastern Europe, while the Allies occupied most of Western Europe. The agreement at Yalta established a framework that divided Europe into two Spheres of Influence. The North Atlantic Treaty Organisation or NATO was founded in 1949 to create a common defence for Western Europe and North America.

Meanwhile, Eastern Europe would be under the Soviet Sphere. In response to NATO, the Soviets created the Warsaw Pact which stated that the nations of Poland, Czechoslovakia, Romania, Hungary, Bulgaria and East Germany would protect each other. Nations under the umbrella of the USSR were known as Satellite states. Great Britain's former Prime Minister, Winston Churchill, said in a 1946 speech that an "Iron Curtain" separated east from west.
