Abstract: This paper presents a new approach to the design of a control system for a nonlinear system. The system is first transformed into a linear system by using a nonlinear transformation. The linear system is then controlled by a linear controller. The resulting control system is nonlinear and is shown to be stable and to track a desired trajectory.

- Abstract. The effect of the size of the sample on the power of the test for the equality of the variances of two normal distributions is investigated. The power of the test is calculated for different values of the sample size and the ratio of the variances. The results show that the power of the test increases with the sample size and the ratio of the variances.

- Abstract—The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program on the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women. The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The subjects were 40 sedentary, middle-aged women who were randomly assigned to either a supervised walking program or a control group. The walking program consisted of 12 weeks of supervised walking, 3 times per week, for 30 minutes per session. The control group consisted of 20 women who did not participate in the walking program. The subjects were assessed at baseline and at 12 weeks for physical and psychological health. The walking program had a significant positive effect on the physical and psychological health of the subjects. The walking program significantly improved the subjects' physical health, as measured by the 6-minute walk test, and their psychological health, as measured by the Beck Depression Inventory and the State-Trait Anxiety Inventory. The walking program also significantly improved the subjects' quality of life, as measured by the SF-36. The walking program was well tolerated and had no adverse effects. The results of this study suggest that a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program can improve the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women.
