Title: Animal Farm Author: George Orwell

Introduction (Characters and setting)

Animals in the Manor farm had a harsh and miserable life even though they worked hard. One night, an old boar Major had a speech about revolution against Manor farm. 3 days later, he died, but his vision hadn't faded. Three pigs named Snowball, Napoleon, and Squealer took the lead in the rebellion. And they succeed by driving Mr. Jones and his family out. They made seven commandments about Animalism. It was better than the past because they could work a little, eat more and take a rest.

Body (Plot - problems and solutions)

But the leader pigs, Napoleon and Snowball had disagreements. One day, they discussed the construction of the windmills. Napoleon stood against Snowball's idea but he didn't give alternatives. The plans were done and the animals assembled to vote whether or not the work would begin. As soon as Snowball stated his opinion, sheep interrupted him. And Napoleon called the farm's dog and banished Snowball. Then he said to the animals that he would be the leader of the animal farm and others had to get their orders from the pigs. That night Squealer explained to the animals that Napoleon was the one who had first planned the windmill and never been opposed to it. Also, he said Snowball deceived and betrayed them. So the other animals believe it. Napoleon and his followers disgraced what Snowball did and changed Snowball's achievement to Napoleon's achievement. Napoleon, Squealer and other pigs broke the seven commandments and changed the seven commandments. Then they said to the animals it was original and blamed their memorization. So the animals believed what they said. The pigs sent the old, wick horse Boxer to a slaughterhouse and said to others that Boxer was going to a hospital. They added the pigs' privileges while making others work hard and reduce their rights. They executed whenever somebody stood against them but they said to others they were executed because they followed Snowball, and betrayed them. The pigs began to live like what the people lived, and dealt with people. Every animal couldn't remember the past and they realized that there was little difference now between the pigs and the men and 'it was impossible to say which was which.'

Conclusion

(Lesson)

I think the author wanted to talk about authority. Napoleon started the revolution to give animals better lives and tried not to do what the people did. As the power of Napoleon grew, it was corrupted and he neglected the seven commandments and changed it. Also he began to do what people did. So the author wanted to teach us that 'Power tends to corrupt and absolute power corrupts absolutely'.
