Section I: Best Practices for Managing in the Global Environment

The best practices for managing in the global environment outlines the 10 behaviors, skills and attributes that would benefit a manager in the world of global environment management as well as management in general—they are as follows (in no particular order):

- 1.) Always keep learning - In an ever-evolving world of diversity, business standards and technological innovation, it's important that managers remain on the cusp of innovation and information. Learning not only from our past experiences, but from others inside and outside our organization.
- 2.) Cultural Sensitivity - Working in the global business environment can present several unique challenges not faced domestically, namely the differences in culture from one region of the world to the next. It is important to be aware of the cultural differences when conducting business and interacting with a customer or employee from another country.
- 3.) Utilize Time and Resources Wisely - This is a given in any position but is necessary nonetheless. Time most certainly is money, and by that logic, time wasted is money wasted. It is important that management knows how to utilize their time and resources appropriately to promote efficiency, especially on a global scale.
- 4.) Maintain Professional Appearance & Demeanor - This is self-descriptive but is most certainly important and a best practice for any managerial staff member.
- 5.) Implement More Diverse Workgroups - By implementing more diverse numbers of people in workgroups or to address certain issues, we can utilize employees skills in a different way; this is a creative way to approach a problem that may otherwise be difficult to solve but is also important to remember when delegating tasks, as a more diverse set of people with a more diverse skill set is much more effective and impactful than a group of people with the same skill set and strengths.
- 6.) Judge Others by Work Completed - By keeping judgements of employees or business partners based upon the work they complete, we can avoid negative business relationships based solely upon someone's personality or culture, which would be unethical in a business setting regardless.
- 7.) Understand Management Styles - A manager and leader must understand that not every employee or business relationship responds the same way to a situation or method of leadership. Some people are motivated and inspired in different ways. What works for one individual may not work for another. It is important to understand that one's specific management style should not be carved in stone, but rather adaptive to the situation or task at hand.
- 8.) Focus on The Team - It's important to hold regular meetings and meet with the employees or business partners to focus on strategic or tactical methods being pursued. This may be in the form of a physical meeting, conference call or video presentation. This grants the ability to check the progress of several groups of people as well as giving or receiving input should an unforeseen obstacle arise.
