

Chapter 7 - Interest Groups

Interest group – any group that attempts to influence public policy (government laws and regulations)

There are thousands of interest groups in the U.S. Some have hundreds of thousands or even millions of members, while others may have just a few dozen. They are active all over the country, and attempt to influence all levels of government (local, state, and federal). Approximately 2/3 of Americans belong to at least one interest group

Pluralist theory of interest groups – this theory holds that policymaking is a competition among diverse interest groups, and that the interests of all socioeconomic classes are represented, not just the wealthy.

Elite theory of interest groups – this theory holds that most interest groups tend to represent the wealthy, highly educated portion of society. Interest groups mainly serve to promote the interests and concerns of the upper socioeconomic class in the United States.

Functions of interest groups:

1. Educate the public about policy issues

Evidence-based Group Work in Community Settings David E. Pollio, Mark J. Macgowan, 2011 There has been a strong recent trend towards incorporating evidence into Social Work practice in general and into group work in particular. This trend has focused on the education of students in the use of evidence development of evidence based interventions and discussion of how evidence can be used to improve practice. A limitation of most of this literature is that it has been written by researchers for the consumption of practitioners limiting the ability of evidence based practices to be incorporated into unique community settings and with specific populations. In spite of this difficulty implementation of evidence based practices continues quietly in practice settings. This book describes efforts to integrate evidence into community settings which have two foci. The first part details group models developed through collaborations between researchers and community agencies. Each chapter details efforts to implement research or review programs in community settings. The second part deals with issues around instruction and dissemination of evidence based group work into practice settings. The volume makes a significant contribution to the discussion about evidence based group work. This book was published as a special issue of Social Work with Groups.
