

Chapter 18 Check Your Understanding questions

Check Your Understanding 18.1

- 1 A memo may be used to note details of the following three events in relation to inventory:
 - a Drawings of inventory – the owner takes home inventory for their own use.
 - b Advertising – the business donates inventory to local groups as a form of advertising or uses some inventory in a store display, meaning it can't be sold
 - c Inventory loss – the business conducts a physical stocktake and identifies that the figure counted is less than the amount of inventory shown in the inventory card.
- 2 Withdrawing inventory will reduce the assets of the business as inventory decreases. Owner's equity also decreases as Drawings (a negative owner's equity account) increases, leading to a decrease in owner's equity.
- 3 Memos are documents used by the business to record internal transactions so a record is kept. This supports the characteristic of verifiability, which requires documentary evidence of all transactions so that records and reports are free from bias and can be relied upon for their accuracy.

Check Your Understanding 18.2

- 1 Gross profit is the profit earned by the business from the buying and selling of inventory. It is the selling price of inventory less the cost price of that inventory. Adjusted gross profit is the gross profit of the business, adjusted to account for inventory losses or gains.
- 2 The cost of sales figure comes from the OUT column of the inventory card, representing the cost price of inventory sold. It is not all items in this column, since purchase returns, inventory losses and inventory used for advertising entries also appear in this column. The cost price of all sales in all inventory cards are added together to provide the cost of sales figure.
- 3 Inventory gain is added to gross profit to determine adjusted gross profit. It is a form of revenue, so it increases the profit of the business.
