

Study Guide for Chapter 1: An Introduction to Anatomy and Physiology

1. Define anatomy and physiology; provide examples of each study. Anatomy is the study of the external and internal human body. Physiology is the study of different types of functions of the human body.

2. Describe and explain the importance of using anatomical position. Using anatomical position helps to describe how human anatomy and physiology is.

3. Explain directional terms and body planes by using examples. Directional terms are telling you which direction of the body it's located and body planes are telling you it is used to break the body down into sections.

4. Describe the levels of structural organization in the human body. The higher the organized levels are formed the lower the levels will be.

a. Differentiate between the building block of matter (atom) and the building block of life (cell). An atom makes molecules and a cell is made up of molecules.

5. Describe the organ systems of the body and their functions. The organ system is telling you about what all you need in a human body to function. The functions are to provide movement, collect and process information, produce sex cells and sex hormones, to control your movements, transport oxygen and nutrients, defend against infection and diseases, process food and absorb nutrients, provide communication within the body, provide protection from injury, deliver air to sites, and remove excess water, salts, and waste products.

6. Identify the locations of the major body cavities and list the organs they contain. There's the dorsal cavity and that includes the cranial cavity. It is closed up by the skull and holds the brain to be secured. There's the spinal cavity that is closed by the spine and has the spinal cord. There's the thoracic cavity which also includes the ventral body cavity and this is closed in by the ribcage and has the lungs and the heart and then there's the abdominopelvic cavity which is the stomach, small and large intestine, the liver, the spleen, the uterus, fallopian tube, ovaries, kidneys and a lot of blood vessels.

7. Define homeostasis and describe its importance to survival. Homeostasis is the process by which this process can help your body heal itself.
