Cardiac Conduction

The heart has the most sophisticated electrical control system and structure actually resides the heart in upper chest. This electrical system is called the cardiac conduction system. It is made up of specialized tissues and cells producing the heart the cardiomyocytes directly to the atria and ventricles, respectively, in the heart's conduction system. The left and right atria contract together first followed by the contraction of the ventricles together.

The cardiac conduction system is composed:

fourteen or thereabout parts:

1. The Sinoatrial Node

Also known as the pacemaker, this node usually generates the electrical impulses that will control the heart's beat.

2. The Atrioventricular Node (AVN) is used to allow for some time difference that cardiomyocytes from the left atria, and continues the electrical signal down into the ventricles.

3. The Purkinje's System

These conducting cells are electrical impulses to the ventricles, causing a contraction. The impulses start at the AVN, travel through the right bundle branch and left bundle branch, and end in Purkinje fibers, spread throughout the ventricles.

The Heartbeat

The sinoatrial (SA) node begins the contraction by sending an impulse through both atria, causing them to contract just as the atrioventricular (AV) node. The AV node continues the impulse, sending it into the bundle of the right atrial bundle branches, and into Purkinje fibers within the ventricles causing both ventricles to contract.

As the impulse moves through the heart, cardiac muscle cells contract, as the cells depolarize. Depolarization is caused by a flood of ions (sodium and potassium) across the cell membranes, which the cells, and therefore cardiac muscle tissue, no longer. When the impulse first passes, the cardiac cells must wait for a while for cardiomyocyte impulses. This electrical repolarization and allows them the ions move back through the cell membranes, causing the cardiomyocyte to stop.

The AV node will create a structure from left to right electrical impulses are received. Each atrial impulse causes a contraction and therefore the (ventricle cells). The electrical impulse causes the heart to depolarize and contract, followed by repolarization and relaxation, at a constant rate. The normal rhythm and rate is called the sinus rhythm. The cardiac conduction system is able to speed up or slow down the number of cardiomyocyte impulses depending on the amount of oxygen.
