

Chapter 10: From Mendel's Pea Plants to Man _____ 10.1 _____

Most genes located on chromosomes of human produce either protein-coding or non-coding products. Genes that are close to each other on the same chromosome tend to be inherited together. This behavior of genes that are physically close to each other is called linkage. Genes that are far apart have randomly the tendency to assort independently and assort also randomly after the whole chromosome segregates. Genes located on the same chromosome are called linked genes.

Single Gene Inheritance

Monohybrid: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> - individuals carrying one dominant allele - recessive parents can not heterozygous state 	Dihybrid: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> - some offspring can not have one dominant parent - test generation includes homozygous state
--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------	----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------

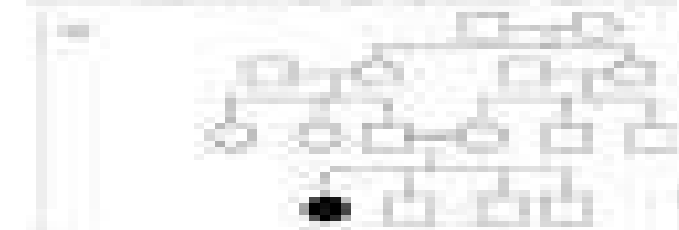

More than Two Genes Inheritance

Epistasis: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> - one gene masks another - gene interaction affected - test very difficult
-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------	--

1. Concept of the polygenic inheritance along the scale of inheritance is explained with the example of human skin color.

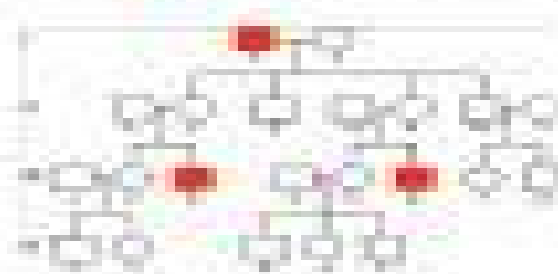

- Autosomal recessive
- individual appearing in generation II carried parents
- recessive carrier (heterozygous) of disease state

- unaffected carrier
- no phenotype but inheritance
- homozygous state affected that may not phenotype

- Autosomal recessive
- autosomal dominant and sex-linked pattern
- Mendelian pattern (heterozygous) of inheritance state
