Man-Machine-Environment System Engineering Shengzhao Long, Balbir S. Dhillon, 2020-09-28 This book presents selected papers introducing readers to the key research topics and latest development trends in the theory and application of MMESE The advanced integrated research topic man machine environment system engineering MMESE was first established in China by Professor Shengzhao Long in 1981 with direct support from one of the greatest modern Chinese scientists Xuesen Qian In a letter to Shengzhao Long from October 22nd 1993 Xuesen Qian wrote You have created a very important modern science and technology in China MMESE primarily focuses on the relationship between man machine and environment studying the optimum combination of man machine environment systems where man refers to people in the workplace e g operators decision makers machine is the general name for any object controlled by man including tools machinery computers systems and technologies and environment describes the specific working conditions under which man and machine interact e g temperature noise vibration and hazardous gases The three goals of optimizing such systems are ensuring safety efficiency and economy Presenting interdisciplinary studies on the concepts and methods in physiology psychology system engineering computer science environmental science management education and other related disciplines this book is a valuable resource for all researchers and professionals whose work involves MMESE subjects Human Performance on the Flight Deck Don Harris, 2016-12-05 Taking an integrated systems approach to dealing exclusively with the human performance issues encountered on the flight deck of the modern airliner this book describes the inter relationships between the various application areas of human factors recognising that the human contribution to the operation of an airliner does not fall into neat pigeonholes The relationship between areas such as pilot selection training flight deck design and safety management is continually emphasised within the book. It also affirms the upside of human factors in aviation, the positive contribution that it can make to the industry and avoids placing undue emphasis on when the human component fails. The book is divided into four main parts. Part one describes the underpinning science base with chapters on human information processing, workload, situation awareness, decision making, error and individual differences. Part two of the book looks at the human in the system, containing chapters on pilot selection, simulation and training, stress, fatigue and alcohol, and environmental stressors. Part three takes a closer look at the machine, the aircraft, beginning with an examination of flight deck display design, followed by chapters on aircraft control, flight deck automation and HCI on the flight deck. Part four completes the volume with a consideration of safety management issues both on the flight deck and across the airline. The final chapter in this section looks at human factors for incident and accident investigation. The book is written for professionals within the aviation industry, both on the flight deck and elsewhere, for post graduate students and for researchers working in the area.

Aviation Automation Charles E. Billings, 2018-01-29 The advent of very compact, very powerful digital computers has made it possible to automate a great many processes that formerly required large, complex machinery. Digital computers have made possible revolutionary changes in industry, commerce and transportation. This book is an expansion and revision of the author's earlier technical papers on this subject. It describes the development of automation in aircraft and in the aviation system, its likely evolution in the future, and the effects that these technologies have had and will have on the human operators and managers of the system. It suggests concepts that may be able to enhance human-machine relationships in future systems. The author focuses on the ability of human operators to work cooperatively with the constellation of machines they command and control, because it is the interactions among these system elements that result in the system's success or failure, whether in aviation or elsewhere. Aviation automation has provided great social and technological benefits, but these benefits have not come without cost. In recent years, new problems in aircraft have emerged due to failures in the human-machine relationship. These incidents and accidents have motivated this inquiry into aviation automation. Similar problems in the air traffic management system are predicted as it becomes more fully automated. In particular, incidents and accidents have occurred which suggest that the principle problems with today's aviation automation are associated with its complexity, coupling, autonomy and opacity. These problems are not unique to aviation; they exist in other highly dynamic domains as well. The author suggests that a different approach to automation, called human-centered automation, offers potential benefits for system performance by enabling a more cooperative human-machine relationship in the control and management of aircraft and air traffic.
