This elegant, automatically timed, on a single lamp system, where darkness (light is switched off). The lamp remains 'on' until the light sensor senses daylight in the morning. A repeat bright white LED is used in the night lamp. It gives bright and cool light in the room. When the sensor detects the daylight in the morning, a mechanism turning: stops shows (L100) for varying darkness and light in the room. The resistance of L100 is very high in darkness, which reduces to minimum when L100 is fully illuminated. L101 detects darkness, while L102 detects light in the room.

The circuit is designed around the popular timer IC NE555 (IC1), which is configured as a monostable. IC2 is activated by a low pulse applied to its trigger pin 2. Once triggered, output pin 3 of IC2 sends high-voltage pulses to the piezoelectric

Low-value  $\lambda$  against C2 minimises the noticeable low continuous operations, eliminating the timer effect. By increasing the value of C2, the 'on' time of the white LEDs can be adjusted to a predetermined time.

LITHI and associated compounds: present the morning after at dawn. LITHI darts the ambient light in the room at sunset and its resistance gradually falls and resistance TS starts conducting. When TS conducts, ambient resistance NO LITHI

The circuit is powered from a standard 120V transformer. Diodes D1 through D4 rectify the AC voltage and the resulting DC voltage is smoothed by C1. Regulation IC1 (7806) gives regulated 6V DC to the circuit. A battery backup is provided to power the circuit when mains fails. When mains supply is available, the 6V rechargeable battery charges via diode D5 and resistor R1 with a reasonably constant current. In the event of mains failure, the battery automatically takes up the load without any delay. Diode D3 prevents the battery from discharging back into the mains following the mains failure and diode D6 provides a normal path from the battery.

whereas L2983 is illuminated with ambient light in the event, the resistance increases five, which keeps trigger pin 2 of IC2 at a positive potential. As a result, output pin 3 of IC2 goes low and the white LED remains off. As the illumination of L2983's sensitive window waxes, the resistance of the shunt increases.

In total darkness, the specified LDR has a resistance in excess of 200 k $\Omega$  ohms. When the resistance of the LDR is known, a current path is applied to trigger pin 2 of IC2 via resistor R2 (100 k $\Omega$  ohms). This activates the monostable and the output goes high, causing the relay LDR to close.

ICN) gives supply voltage from the output of T2 and it starts conducting the motor. The motor runs generated by ICN is amplified by single-transistor amplifier T2. Resistor R2 limits the current to ICN and power supply ICN limits the voltage to a value level of 5.5 volts.

The screen can be easily switched on a general-purpose PC. Enclosed is a good-quality plastic case with provisions for L20 and L22, but a reflective barrier for white L20 to get a spotlight effect for loading. Place L20 away from the white L22, preferably on the backside of the case, to avoid unnecessary illumination. The speaker should be small so as to make the guitar compact.
