Chapter 18, Section 1

The Fundamental Economic Problem (pages 404-409)

1. Economics: Choice (pages 404-409)

- A. Economics is the study of how we make decisions in a world where resources are scarce.
- B. Economics is sometimes called the science of choice making.
- C. Things we struggle to choose for: food, clothing, education, housing, etc.
- D. Things we cannot choose for:
- A. The fundamental economic problem is scarcity – are the real facts enough resources for producing all the things we would like to have. Because of scarcity, we must choose among alternatives.
 - B. Society must decide what to produce with its limited resources. For example, society
 - C. Society must choose whether to produce goods for consumption or services for production.
 - D. Society must decide how to produce. For example, should we accept more pollution to get resources for producing for greatest number of products?
 - E. Society must decide who to produce. For example, the goods are produced by the market system, then goods are sold and then are distributed through the price system.

Scarcity: Question

- What are the three basic economic questions that a society must answer?
 What? How? For whom?
 Every economic question is answered by the choices that society makes to produce, allocate, and consume resources.

18. Using Economic Models (pages 409-411)

- A. The economic includes all the things in a nation that together represent the production and use of goods and services.
- B. In society, part of the economy, consumption and production interacts together.
- C. The market is part of the economy, consumption and production interacts together in the real world, based on economic behavior.
